OUR capital G is derived from the Latin C, which, as stated under C, is a rounded form of the Greek Camma. Until the middle of the 3rd century B.C. the letter " was used in Latin inscriptions to denote both the c and q sounds, and throughout the whole of Roman history remained as the symbol for G in the abbreviations C. and Cn. for "Gaius" and "Gnaeus." But because of the meonvenience of this practice, a slight modification was made for the g sound. Plutarch says that the symbol was invented by Spurius Carvilms Ruga, who spelled his family name RVGA instead of RVCA (the V still being used for the sound which we represent by U). i. first the only change was that the lower lip of the crescent rose in a straight line. In a later form this was curved inward, and in another had a sort of " beard " added, which became the little cross-bar of to-day's G.

THE sound of the letter H is a weakened form of the Phoenician cheth which was pronounced like the Scots or German ch. This Phoenician letter consisted of two uprights connected by two or three transverse bars, ||, ||, ||, and its name meant "tence." It was derived from the Egyptian hieroglyph representing a sieve , which developed into the form , and was finally transformed into the angular, ladderlike character. The early Greeks wrote it B and later, omitting the cross-bars top and bottom, gave it the form of our H. Its sound ceased to be a guttural and became an aspirate or breathing sound like our h. The eastern Greeks lost the aspirate and adopted the symbol to represent the long e-sound (like our "a"), calling it eta. The western Greeks retained the aspirate, and the Romans took it over from them. But in vulgar Latin it disappeared.

IKE C and G, and U and V, the letters I and J were originally forms of the same letter. The vowel sound i and the consonant sound j were both represented by I until about the 15th century. Then some of the monks who worked on the beautiful illuminated manuscripts of that time used to lengthen the letter I and curve it toward the left when it began a word, thus making of it an ornamental initial. Gradually this form came to be used entirely to represent the consonant sound while the old form was retained for the vowel sound. This consonant sound was originally like our y Thus Julius in Latin was pronounced as though it were spelt Yulius. The sound we give it in English, dzh, like our soft q, came to us from the Old French. In modern French it is pronounced with a still softer sound like zh. In German and some other tongues it is still pronounced y.

OUR letter K was once the Egyptian hieroglyph which was the picture of a bowl. But when written, It looked like this and its modified form in the Phoenician alphabet began to look somewhat like our K, written backward. The Phoenicians called it kaph, which means "the palm of the hand," or perhaps "the bent hand." The Greeks gave it its present form, changing the name to kappa In Latin, C came to be used tor k sound, K being used only in cert in abbreviations this influenced use of C for k sound in Anglo Saxon and Early English, e.g. cyniq (king) The practice of giving (the s or sh sound before certain vowels (as in century cinder, ocean) led to confusion. Then K came to be used particularly before e and i, for the hard sound, as in km^{j} keg, etc. The combination ck was originally kk, this bear used after a short vowel when ed, er, or ing was added

THE letter L is thought to be descended from the ancient Egyptian hieroglyph representing a lioness 🗪 which became the symbol , or when written in a running hand. Here some resemblance to bur letter is already visible. The Phoenicians wrote it like this: Land called it lamed, "ox-good," from its resemblance to that object. The Greeks called it lambda and turned it about so that it looked like our V upside-down, A.

The Romans straightened it out to the form it has torday. The sound of and r, known as the liquids, are very closely related. In fact, scholars tell us that in Egyptian, as in some other languages, no clear distinction was made between them, the signs for these sounds being used interchangeably. There are peoples, e.g. the Chinese, who cannot sound the r, and these substitute I for r (velly for very). This use of l for r is known as "lambdacism.

Those unfamiliar with logarithms should read the general principles, especially about the mantissa and characteristic, in the article on Logarithms before using this table.

Finding logarithms of numbers. Locate the first two figures in the left-hand column and the third in the top row. The corresponding four numbers in the table are the mantissa (mantissa of 151 is 1790). The characteristic is one less than the number of digits to the left of the decimal point. Thus the logarithm of 1-51 (usually written $\log 1.51 \rightarrow 0.1790$; $\log 15.1 \rightarrow 1.1790$; $\log 15.1 \rightarrow 2.1790$; and so on.

For decimal fractions, the characteristic is one greater than the number of zeros between the decimal point and the first significant digit, and has a negative sign above the characteristic, with the mantissa in the table (log $0.151 = \overline{1}.1790$; log $0.0151 = \overline{2}.1790$; and so on).

To find the logarithm of a number having four significant digits proceed by interpolation as follows: obtain the difference between the mantiseas for the next smaller and next larger three-digit numbers. multiply this by the last digit of your number, divide by 10, and add the result to the logarithm for the first three digits of the number. Thus to find log 15:13. Log 15:2 (=1:1818) -log 15:1 (= 1:1790) -0028. $\frac{1}{10} \times 0028 = 00084$. Adding: 1:1700 + 00084 = 1:1798(4) (=log 15:13). The column marked D at the right gives the average value for the difference between any two mantisess on the line, and may be used (remembering to multiply, then divide by 10 as above) if less accurate results will suffice.

To find a number from its logarithm. Locate in the table the mantissa next below the one you have, write the three corresponding charts from the side column and the top row and put in the decimal point as the characteristic requires. For remaining digits, reverse the interpolation process given above. Thus, to find the number for the logarithm 1-17984. The next lowest mantissa is 1796, and the number (with decimal point inserted for characteristic 1) is 15.1. The difference between mantissas, -1790 and -1818 is -0029. Divide by the difference of the context of the conte yo ve -=3.3. Adding this after 15.1 (not to it) gives $\frac{-0.0084}{15.13(3)}$, the answer.

Computing with logarithms. When all characteristics are positive, the computations proceed as explained in the article on Logaritims. When negative characteristics appear treat the characteristics and mantissas separately, and at the end combine any characteristic resulting from the mantissas with the others. Thus, to find 151×0·151, To log 151 (+2·1790) add log 0·151 (-T·1790). Result: 1·3590 (~log of 22·8 approx.). To divide 0·151 by 151: from 0x 0·151 (-T·1790) subtract log 151 (-2·1790). Result: 3·000 (~log of 001). To find the 7th power of 0·151: multiply log 0·151 (-T·1790) by 7. Answer: 7+(7+·1790) = 7 + 1·2530 = 0·2580 (= log of 0·00000179 approx. (See also Logarithms.)

S1X thousand years ago our letter M was an ovl. and to this day the owl's "horns" remain in those two peaks-and the beak between them, where it is in the real owl. It must have taken considerable time to draw the as it appeared in Egyptian picture-writing, so a very much simplified form was developed by the Egyptian scribes who wrote on papyrus. The early Phoenicians, carving on stone, naturally gave the letter a more angular character. It is easy to see how this developed into the symmetrical Greek and Roman M which we use. In sound m is called a labial nasal. It is made by sending the breath through the nose while the lips are closed and the vocal cords are vil ting. Its pronunciation has changed but little since ancient times. Like l, n, and r, it may stand alone as a syllable without the aid of any vowel, as in chasm.

THE series of little waves which formed the Egyptian sign called the "water line" www was the ancestor of our letter N. When written in running hand, the undulations tended to disappear and the character assumed the form which looked more like a fish. The Phoenicians and Hebrews called it nun, the word for " fish " in their language, but they still further modified it so that we might be inclined to say it looked more like a fish-hook than a fish J The early Greeks and Latins straightened the lines J and, making them of more even length, evolved our N. AS far back as we can trace the letter Q, it has undergone little change. Its first appearance seems to be in the Phoenician alphabet as a slightly irregular circle. It was supposed to represent an eye and was balled ayin, the Phoenician word for "eye." In the Greek alphabet are two O characters, great O (omega, 12) and little O (omicron, O), but originally there was only one. Such departures from the perfect circle as we find in ancient inscriptions were due to the difficulty of inscribing a circle on stone. Thus sometimes its form is that of an ellipse, sometimes it is square, and sometimes it is nearly a diamond. The form of the letter suggests its pronunciation. The sound of "long" O is pronounced while the mouth is rounded, and the back part of the tongue is raised and somewhat rounded. In English O has many uses, alone and in combination with various sounds for example, in not, post, move, love, women, woman, book, brood, owl, bowl, rough, out, ought, soul, boat, broad

ONE of the Egyptian hieroglyphs was a shutter . This developed into the character which was borrowed by the Phoenicians. They called it Pe, "mouth," perhaps because it looked like a mouth with teeth. When they themselves wrote it, they simplified it so that it is hard to see the resemblance to a mouth ? but they still kept the name. The Greeks used the same form, but turned the hook to the right. They afterwards squared the top thus [and finally made the two legs of equal length, in the character | which became the modern Greek letter pi. The Romans adopted the rounded form f, which they curved more and more, until finally the semi-circle was closed exactly as in our letter P. Its name has changed very little, nor has its sound, formed by closing the lips for an instant, and then allowing the breath to escape through them explosively.

A more sophisticated type of school story was developed in the early 20th century by R. S. Warren Bell, P. G. Wodehouse, and others; and the tradition has since been maintained, pre-eminently by Gunby Hadath, the first of whose many fine school stories was published in 1913. Stories about girls' schools were never as firmly established in popular favour; but among those few writers who tackled them with success, Angela Brazil (d. 1947) will be remembered as being particularly outstanding.

Poetry for children also began by being edifying and instructive rather than enjoyable, if we are to judge from Dr. Watts's collection of Divine and Except for further minor alterations to one line, this is how the passage appears in our "Children's Books" article, Vol. 2. In fairness to our printers it should be made clear that all these errors were deliberately made for the purpose of this explanation. In the normal way so many errors in type-setting would never be made within so small a space.

THE Egyptian picture sign 2 from which our Q is descended represents either an angle or a knee which, of course, forms an angle when bent. In the Egyptian script this sign takes a form which begins to look rather like our Q. The Phoenicians formed it like this Φ and named it qoph. Some scholars say this means "spe" and that the character represents an ape with its tail hanging down. Another theory is that it represents an aperture of some kind, the eye of a needle pt.rhaps-or a human ear. The Phoenicians and Hebrewgave it a sound similar to that of kapk (the Phoenicia) K), but sounded farther back in the throat. The letter Q is not found in classic or modern Greek, for it was dropped (except as a numeral) at a very early date. The Romans kept it and gave it its present form, using it we do, with u, the combination qu having the scund of k

Quotation

OUR letter R is generally traced back to the old Egyptian hieroglyph representing a mouth. Written in a running hand (the so-called hieratic form) it became . The Phoenicians, writing on stone, gave it a more angular form 4 and called it resh, meaning " head," from its fancied resemblance to the head supported by the neck. The Greeks turned it round and then later rounded it so that it looked just like our P. We should have had two letters with exactly the same form had they not added a little tail, which made the letter R awe have it to-day. The Romans kept this form, but the Greeks, who had developed the form I for P, dropped the tail again, so their R (Rho) is still written P. No other consonant shows so many variations in pronunciation In France and Germany it is rolled. In Great Britain and North America it varies according to the locality

THERE was a time when the letter S looked more like our W. Turn the W on its side and cut off the bottom line and you get something that looks very much hke our S. The story of S begins, in Egyptian purture-writing, with the hieroglyph mundated garden," representing papyrus or lotus plants growing out of the water. When it came to written in the Egyptian running hand like this , it no longer looked like a garden, and the Phoenicians called it shin, which means "teeth." It you look closely, you can see the outline of the lower teeth, and the chin and beard as well. But the Phoenicians themselves made it w, like a squat W. The Greeks took it and, standing it on its side, made it into their latter & (sigma). Later the last stroke was omitted, and then, when the Romans had rounded the points, it became our familiar letter S.

LANDMARKS IN THE HISTORY OF SCIENCE

Linnaeus publishes Species Plantarum, the first system of botanical classification.

Rouelle dofines alkalis, earths, metals, and base. Black prepares carbon dioxide from chalk. Black discovers, defines, and names the phenomena of latent and specific heat.

Maskelyne founds the Nautical Almanac Carondish prepares hydrogen.

James Watt patents steam engine.

Edward Jenner introduces vaccination.

Cugnot builds first steam traction-engine.

Joseph Priestley isolates oxygen.

Mesmor propounds his theory of mesmerism of animal magnetism.

Lassone first propares carbon monoxide.

Lavoister propounds oxygen theory of combustion Cavendish synthesises water by exploding hydrogen with oxygen. Sir William Herschel discovers the planet Uranus.

The brothers Montgolfier invent the hot-amballoon. A.D. 1753 Thales of Miletus demonstrates that rubbed amber attracts certain substances, such as silk. Pythagoras demonstrates the relationship between the kension of a wire when plucked and the note c.600 c.500 1755 1760 the Musical of a wife which prediction of light.
Euclid propounds the law of reflection of light.
Archimedes demonstrates the principle of the lever.
Archimedes demonstrates the force of buoyancy in liquids (basis of the hydrometer). c.300 c.2601768 1766 c.2201769 1769 1770 A.D. 1450 Gutenberg introduces printing from movable type.
Nicolas Copernicus propounds his theory of planetary motion.
Gerard Mercator introduces his system of map 1776 1530 1569 Gerard Mercator introduces his system of map projection.
Galileo establishes law of pendulum vibration.
Galileo demonstrates that all bodies fall with the same rate of socieleration. Janesen inventa the first compound microscope.
Gilbert demonstrates that the earth is a magnet and coins the term electricity.
Konles sutablishes the laws progening collines of 1777 1781 1581 1590 The broth 1783 1600 balloon.
Coulomb states the inverse square law of magnetism.
Jeffrier and Blanchard pilot first balloon to crossenglish Channel.
Watt defines and introduces the horse-power unit of work. Cartwright invents the power loon. 1781 Kepler establishes the laws governing eclipses of 1609 Action establishes the laws governing collipses of sun.
Gallico discovers Jupiter's moons.
Lippershay invents first practical telescope.
'Harriott discovers spots on the sun.
'Gunter invents the quadrant.
Snell propounds his law of refraction of light.
Harvey publishes his treatise on the circulation of the hlood.
'Van Helmont coins the torm "gas."
Torricell invents the barometer.
Pascal dethonstrates that barometric pressure decreases with altitude.
Glauber first prepares spirit of salt, muriatic acid, and hydrochloric acid.
Huggens invents pendulum clock.
Royal Society founded.
Boyle conceives his theory of the chemical element.
Boyle proporteds his law to relate the volume 1785 1600 1608 1610 16£0 1787 Lavoisier publishes his Method of Chemical Nomenclature. Charles propounds his law of the expansion of gases. 1621 1628 1610 Saint invents the first sewing machine.
Gall publishes his system of phrenology.
Galvani publishes his observations on the effect of electric shock on frogs' logs. 1790 1791 1648 1791 Murdock introduces lighting by coal gas.
Cavondish calculates mass of the earth. Rumford discovers that heat is due to molecular motion 1649 1792 1798 1657 1660 1661 Itoyal Institution founded.

Borthollet propounds the laws of chemical affinity. Proust propounds the law of fixed proportions of combining elements. 1799 1799 element.

Boyle propounds his law to relate the volume and pressure of a gas at constant temperature. Pascal demonstrates that the pressure in a liquid depends upon its depth and density.

Hook observes interference of light. Grimaldi observes diffraction of light.

Newton propounds his law of gravitation, also investigates the spectrum of light. Bartholium discovers that lockand spar induces duble gefraction of light.

Greenwich Observatory established.

Hooke propounds his law relating stress to strain in a body. Römer determines the velocity of light. 1662 Cuvier publishes his system of comparative anatomy. 1800 1663 Volta invents the electric cell. Nicholson and Carlisle electrolyse water. Herschel discovers the infra-red portion of the spectrum. 1800 1665 1466 1801 Ritter discovers ultra-violet portion of spectrum 1669 Young defines energy. Young defines energy.
John Dalton propounds his atomic theory.
Fulton builds first practical steam hit.
Sir Humphry Davy isolates potassium.
Gay-Lussac propounds his law of volumes of combining gases.
Courtois discovers iodine.
Thomson fixes oxygen as the standard of atoma and molecular weights. Davy discover-fluorine.
Stepheneon builds his first steam railway 1000-1803 1803 1675 1676 Hooke propounds his law relating stress to strain in a body. Römer determines the velocity of light.
Huygens develops the wave theory of light.
Boyle defines the term "salt" in chemistry.
Halley establishes perodicity law of comets.
Newton propounds his law of motions of bodies.
Stahl prepares gulphur dioxide or volatile sulphurous acid by burning sulphur in air.
Fabronheit invents alcohol thermometer.
Fahrenheit invents mercury thermometer.
Celsius publishes his contigrade scale for thermometer. 1807 1809 1078 1680 1682 1687 1813 1702 Stephenson builds his first steam railway loco-1814 motive. 1709 Sir Humphry Davy invents miners' safety lamp Prout suggests that the atomic weights of the elements are all exact multiples of the atomic weight of hydrogen. moter. 1745
Muschenbroek devises the Leyden jar (electrostatic capacitator).
1747
Franklin propounds the one fluid theory of electricity.
1752
Franklin induces electricity from a thundercloud and invents the lightning conductor.

1817 1818

Bertelius discovers selenium and lays down his theory of radicles.
Dulong and Petit formulate the theory that the product of the specific heat and atomic weight of elements is always the same.

Sciatic [stat'lk] Nerves. Two mixed nerves, rising in nerve plexus in pelvis; great solatio, the largest nerve in the body, 5-363 diag.

2,500 YEARS OF DISCOVERY AND INVENTION

A D 1819 Berzelius publishes a list of 50 elements. Oersted establishes the magnetic effect of an 1820 electric current.

Arago measures the speed of sound.

First steam railway opened (Stockton and 1822 1825 First steam railway opened (Stockton and Darlington).
Ohm propounds his law of resistance in electrical circuits. Balard discovers bromine.
Wohler separates aluminium. Brown announces his observations on the movements in liquids due to molecular motion (Brownian Movement) Faraday invests the dynamo.
British Association for the Advancement of Science founded.
McCounick invents the resping machine.
Faraday propounds his law of electrolysis of solutions. Dumas propounds his three laws of substitution in organic chemistry. Politer discovers the thermo-electric effect.
Dagnerre invents his system of photograph v. Cooke and Wheatstone patent first electric telegraph.
Ether first used as an anaesthetic. Mayer propounds his law of conservation of energy.
Thurber invents first practicable typewriter Joule's experiments in converting motion of energy. Darlington). 1826 1827 1831 1832 1834 1837 1843 Into near commins mayor's law of conservation of energy.

Adams discovers the planet Neptune
First use of chloroform in surgery.

Kelvin and Clausius propound independently the second law of thermodynamics

Storm deltan name is built by Clausius 1847 1851 the second law of thermodynamics
Steam driven airishle built by Giffard
Perkin makes the first aniline dives Darwin's Origin of Species states his theory of evolution. Cannivare compiles table of atomic and molecular weights based on hydrogen as 1
Swan invents the first practical electric lamp
Royal Aeronautical Society founded.
Lord Lister publishes his principles of antiseptic surgery. Siemens-Martin invent the openhearth system for making steel Mendeleev establishes the periodic law of the properties of the elements
May invents the photo-electric cell. 1859 1858 1866 1869 properties of the elements
May invents the photo-electric cell.
Temple discovers comet named after him
Discovery of D.D.T. announced.
Graham Bell patents telephone.
Pasteur proves the germ theory of anthrax and other diseases. Pictet and Callietet independently obtain liquid oxygen.
Otto invents the gas engine.
Stefan propounds the law of radiation of black bodies, and so establishes the science of optical pyrometry.
Natural History Museum, London, opened 1877 Natural History Museum, London, opened Pasteur proves that tuberculosis is caused by a bacterium. 1881 1882 bacterium.

Parsons invents his steam turbine.

Mergenthaler invents the linotype.

Herts demonstrates radio waves. Daimler builds the first petrol-engined motor car.

Pasteur discovers and introduces method of innoculation against bydrophobia. Dunlop patents the first pneumatic tyre.

Chardonnet manufactures the first artificial silk. Diesel invents the compression ignition engine.

Marconi transmits the first message by radio.

Röntgen discovers X-rays. Ramsay and Rayleigh discover argon in the atmosphere. 1888 1889 1892

1896 Berquerel establishes the presence of radio Becquerer constants activity.

Thomson discovers the electron.

Sir Ronald Ross isolates maluria carrying 1897 1897 mosquito.

Mme. Curis discovers radium.

Rutherford discovers the radio active alpha, beta, and gamma rays. 1898 1899 Planck propounds his quantum theory Marchese Marconi sends first radio signal across Atlantic. 1900 1901 Millikan and Kohlhörster make the first investiga-tion of cosmic radiation. 1903 Fleming invents the thermionic valve. Einstein publishes his Specul Theory of Rela 1904 1905 tin niy. 1906 Hopkins establishes that vitamins are essential to efficient diet. Backeland invents Bakelite Funk isolates vitamin A. Onnes liquifies helium Lane establishes that X-rays are a form of $\frac{1911}{1912}$ radiation. Soddy defines isotopes atoms with the same chemical properties but different atoms chemical weights. 1914 Einstein publishes his General Theory of Rela Aston demonstrates that many elements are mixtures of isotopes, each having an atomic weight which is a multiple of one.

Banting discovers insulin.
Baird demonstrates his system of television. Tembough discovers heavy hydrogen (deuterium) and heavy water. 1920 1923 1930 1931 heavy water.
First pr duction of synthetic rubber (Neopiem)
Professor Piccard makes first manned balloon ascent into the stratosphere 1931 1931 Vitamin D first produced in pure crystallised state Anderson discovers position Chadwick dis-1932 Anderson discovers Anderson agreements positron Chauwick discovers neutron.

First British jet-propelled aircraft flow.

First man-made atomic explosion (Alamogordo U 3.A.)

Carbon isotope (carbon 13) isolated. 1945 1946 Radas contact with moon established. 1946 • Wakeman annunces discovery of streptomycin. Cobait 60 produced for use in treatment of cancer. First synchro-cyclotron built in Britain 1948 Chicago university transmutes mercury into gold First British mechanical brain (chetric calculating machine) completed. Antibiotic chioromycetin discovered Cortisone (compound E) discovered. First rain-making experiments carried out in Britain. 1949 National Physical Laboratory, England, announces exact determination of the speed of light, 186,282 miles a second. 1950 1951 First use in Britain of atomic energy for cutital heating. Atomic energy used to generate electric power in U.S.A. Hannane (insecturity developed to prevent "swollen shoot" discass in cocca plantations.

1952 First British atomic weapon exploded. Britain begins construction of first radio telescope. Nicholson discovers twelfth satellite of Jupites Mount Everget scaled for the first time. Submarine Nautilus, first atomic-powered ship, launched in U.S.A.

AN ABC OF PRECIOUS STONES

Agate. A type of chalcedony or semi-precious quartz, with coloured bands, first found on banks of river Achates (Sicily), hence the name. The markings of moss agates occasionally resemble natural objects, and so were much prized in the past. Most agates are naturally greyish and are artificially coloured.

Amethyst. A quartz found in Brazil, Ceylon, and Siberia. Heat turns it yellow. Worn by ancients to prevent intoxication; many wineglasses were made of it in ancient Rome. Was formerly ten times as valuable as to-day.

Aquamarine. A sea-blue or scagreen beryl, of the same class as the emerald, but far less valuable.

Aventurine. A quartz spangled with yellow mica or other mineral. Also called goldstone.

Azurite. An azure-blue copper carbonate found in most copper mines, usually directly above a layer of green malachite. Pliny calls it caeruleum. Vulue not great.

Beryl. A silicate of low value,

Beryl. A silicate of low value, though related to the emerald. May be green, light blue, yellow, pink, or white.

Bloodstone. A quartz, dark green with blood-red spots, prized in Middle Ages for carvings of martyrs. Also called heliotrope. Found in Persia, Siberia, Colorado, U.S.A.

Calrngorm. Black or smoky vellow quartz, changed by heating to dark brown or yellow. National stone of Scotland; also called scottish topaz. Often nearly opaque.

Carbuncie. A garnet cut en rabochon, that is, flat on the bottom, rounded above, without facets. In ancient times any red stone was called a carbuncle, and a mythical carbuncle? was said to give out light in darkness.

Carnelian. Name given to brown and red chalcedony. Much used for engraved seals in ancient times.

Cat's-eye. The cheaper cat's-eye is of quartz, the more highly valued is of chrysoberyl. Colours range from apple-green to olive, from vellow to brown, but each has a streak or line of varying brilliance, through the middle, like a cat's eye. Hindus value the stone second to the diamond.

Chalcedony. A crypto-crystalline quartz, used by gem engravers in all ages. Called onyx, sardonyx, sard, and carnelian, according to staining.

Chrysoberyl. A rare, unusually hard stone. One variety, the alexandrite, green by day and red by lamplight, had a great vogue among R saian aristocrats.

Chrysolite. An olive-green vitreous magnesium iron silicate; also called olivino and peridot. It is crystalline and, when transparent, used as gem.

Chrysoprase. An apple-green type of chalcedony, found in U.S.A. and Polish Silesia.

Cymophane. Same as cat's-eye.

Diamond. Pure crystallised carbon; hardest known substance, is fairly brittle and castly split, contrary to popular belief that a diamond may be pounded with a hammer and will not break. World's largest and richest deposits are in the Union of South Africa.

Emerald. When large, brilliant, and flawless, the emerald is the costliest of gems. Composed of silicate of aluminium and beryllium. Chief source of deep green coneralds is Colombia. Some of the most beautiful from North 'arolina, U.S.A.

Garnet. A deep red stone, of two varieties, almandine or almandite, and pyrope or Bohemian garnet. When cut en cabochen, both are called carbuncles. The Bobrovka, or green garnet, resembles emerald, but is not hard. Ohvine is erroneously called green garnet. Hyacinths are garnets.

Heliotrope. Same as bloodstone. Jade. A name applied to jadete, nephrite, and chloromelanite. Jewelry, cups, altar-pieces, and bells or sounding stones are made of it, and poems of emperors have been carved in priceless jade bowls. It does not occur naturally in thina, but is imported from Burma. It is also found in Siberia, New Zealand, Mexico, and Europe.

Jasper. An opaque quartz, a variety of chalcedony, putty colour, red, or yellow, mined in Egypt and Russia; much used in Russia for vases, tables, mantels, etc.

Jet. A hard black lighte, or variety of fossil coal, mined in Great Britain, China, and elsewhere. Light in weight.

Lapis Lazuli. Sodium aluminium silicate with sodium sulphido; usually deep blue. Mines in Afghanistan, worked for 6,000 years, probably world's oldest mines. Chiled "sapphire" by ancient world. Finest varieties are gold-flecked with iron pyrites. Cracked quartz stained blue is sold as "Swiss lapis."

Malachite. Colours range from dark to grass green, streaky, much used in Russia. Slabs occur large enough for table tops.

Marcasite. Metallic stone ranging from slate-grey to breaze-yellow, same composition as pyrites, often set as brilliants in costume jewelry.

Moonstone. A variety of translucent feldspar; has a moon-like flash; best specimens found in Ceylon.

Obsidian. A smoky natural glass of volcanic formation, abundant in Yellowstone Park, U.S.A. Used by early Mexicans and North American Indians to make mirrors, arrowheads, and knives.

Olivine. Same as peridot and chrysolite, differing only in colour.

Onyx. The cameo carver's favourite material. Quarts, or chalcedony, with horizontal stripes of black and white, found in South America and Indian sub-continent.

Opal. Harlequin opals have itashes of colour throughout; fire opals are yellow or red with a shifting glow; black opals are dark with coloured lights. Occur in Hungary, Australia, Mexico, and U.S.A. World's largest opal, size of half a brick, black with green and blue fire, found in Nevada. Reputation for ill luck may be due to fragility of stone and occasional loss of brilliance.

Pearl. Not truly a precious stone but the product of pearl oysters.

Peridot. Same as olivine and chrysolite.

Rhodonite. A red or rose stone. streaked with black, of manganese and silica; much prized in Russia.

Rock crystal. A quartz much used for beads, vases, goblets, and crystal balls.

Ruby. A transparent red corun dum valued according to shade of colour. Best grade found in Bunna, others in Siam, Ceylon, U.S.A. Most valuable shade is "pigeon's blood." Fino rubies of 4 3r more carnts are worth from 2 to 5 times as much as diamonds of same size. Seldom weigh more than 8 or 10 carats.

Sapphire. A transparent corundum, or aluminium oxide, found mainly in Burma, Ceylon, Siam, and Kashmir; lesser qualities in Australia and U.S.A. Bost shades "cornflower" and "volvet" blues, Largest known weighs 916 carats.

Sardonyx. A variety of chalcedony with brown and white stripes, or layers of chalcedony and carnelian.

Spinel. Composed of magnesium and aluminium. Clear spinels are valuable; red ones called "spinel rubies."

Topaz. Scots topaz is yellow quartz. Oriental is yellow sapphire. Brazilian is true topaz. When heated, yellow topaz turns pink. "World's largest diamond," among Portuguese crown jewels, may be colouriess topaz. Topaz may be blue, green, brown, pink, white, or yellow.

Tourmaline. A splicate, either black, brown, blue, green, red, or colourless, various colours having different names. Found in Brazil, Siberia, and U.S.A.

Turquoise. An aluminium phosphate, from sky-blue to apple-green. Best grade from Persia, where it has been mined for 800 years. Also found in U.S.A. Heat and sunlight fade turquoise or turn it green. Turquoise matrix is mottled with natural rock.

Zircon. The mineral torm of zirconium, silicate. It is found in Ceylon, Australia, Europe, and South America. Natural colours are blue, brown, and green, but are frequently heat-breated to secure greater brilliancy, and colours have been known to fade. Closely related to the hyacinth (red), jacinth (yellow), and jargoon (white), differing, only in colour.

THE original form of T in the Egyptian hieroglyphics is the picture of a noose or a lasso, or, as some cholars think, that of a tongue. The Phoenicians made it in the form of a cross X + with the four arms of qual length. They and the Hebrews used it as a sign for marking the ownership of animals and for other elentification purposes; the name was tau. Early Greeks moved the horizontal to the top and so made the Towe have to-day. Examine the small form of the letter (t) as it is printed to-day; notice that the upper left angle of the t-bar is rounded, whilst the right is sharp. This originated in the old manuscripts when the horizontal bar was made first, from right to left, and the vertical stroke added without taking the pen off the paper.

LIKE C and G, and I and J, the letters U, V, W, Y were originally only variations of the same letter. They were all descended, like F, from the Phoemeian war or ran, which was once the horned asp of Egypt (see the story of F). In Latin for a long time the forms V and U were used without distinction. In most Latin inscriptions up to the end of the 2nd century A.D. no distinction is made between the two. But in the course ·of time the form V came to be used by preference at the beginning of a word and the form U elsewhere. As the consonant sound more commonly occurred at the beginning. the form V finally came to denote the consonant and the form U to represent the vowel. The letter has several sounds in English, variously represented in such words as pull, but, tube; and it is often used to modify the sound of another vowel that precedes it, as in fraud and stout distinction is made between the two. I

IN inscriptions on stone, on memorial tablets and public buildings, U is even to-day very frequently made in the shape of a V. This gives the inscription an air of antiquity, for the U was originally made in that way on Greek and Roman inscriptions, since it was easier to cut with the chisel. The story of how the two letters V and U developed is told under U. The characters V and U were used for the same sound in Latin, Norman-

French, and English as late as the Elizabethan period and were counted as one in alphabetic arrangements V was commonly called "single U" as W was 'double U" until the early 17th cent. The sound of v in Latin was like our w. V is pronounced in English with the upper teeth touching the lower lip. In Spanish, and to some extent in German, V is pronounced with hips stiffened and brought together teeth not below involved at all and brought together, teeth not being involved at all

THE twenty-third letter of the English alphabet is formed of two V's, but we call it "double u." The stories of U and V explain why this is so. The letter was originally written U or VV in the days when U and V were forms of the same letter. But in this case the VV form, which became W when the letters were crossed, was the one that survived. In sound it remains an ambiguity, half vowel and half consonant. It is usually pronounced as in we, with the lips rounded as for the oo in pool, but without the resonance and fullness of a genuine vowel. In which, when, or what, the spelling reverses the pronunciation, which is his, a curious whisper peculiar to English to-day, though also occurring in the dead Gothic language. In whole the W is silent, and the W once sounded in write and wrong has disappeared. W is pronounced as v in German, the V being sounded as f.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES IN COMMON USE

MEASURES OF LENGTH

12 inches =1 foot (ft.)

3 feet -1 yard (yd.)

1 yards (101 ft.) = 1 rod, pole, or perch

40 rods = 1 furlong

8 fur. (1,760 yds) = 1 mile

rveyors' Measure

7 02 inches = 1 link

25 links = 1 rod

4 rods (100 links) == 1 chain

10 chains =1 furlong

8 fur. (80 chams) = 1 mile

Nautical Measures

6 fect = 1 fathom

100 tathoms -1 cable

10 cables - 1 nautical mile

6,080 feet -1 Admiralty mile

Strictly speaking, the nautical mile is one minute of latitude, and a consequently rather more than 20 yds longer at the poles than the equator. For practical purposes it is taken as equal to the Admiralty mile. The discrepancy between this (6,080 ft.) and 10 cables (6,000 ft.) is unimportant, since the cable is used only in estimating distances by eye.

A knot is a speed of I nautual mile per hour. The expression "knots per hour" is wrong,

MEASURES OF AREA

4 quarters (112 lb.) = 1 hundredweight (cwt)

20 cwt. (2,240 lb.) =1 ton

Troy (precious stones and metals)

4 grains -1 carat

6 carats (24 grains) =1 penny weight (dwt.)

20 dwt. - 1 ounce

12 ounces =1 pound

The pound troy, which was 5,760 grains, as against 7,000 grains for the pound avoirdupois, is no longer used, and gold and silver are now weighed in ounces and decimals of an ounce; precious stones in international carats of 200 (instead of 259) milligrams.

Apothecarses' Weight

20 grains —1 scruple (91) 3 scruples —1 drachm (31)

8 diachms = 1 ounce (31)

OUR letter X got into the alphabet by starting as a chair back. That is what the sign represented in the picture-writing of the Egyptians. In the hieratic writing it became A and the Phoenicans added some the property of the start of more horizontal bars and made it (samekh), out of which grew the Greek Z. The Greeks also developed another form X, which passed to the Romans and from them to us. It is thought that samekh was also sometimes written I and that from this two characters developed: one E by removing the vertical lines, and the other + by removing the enclosing square. Then the latter was tilted over and became X. In classical Greek the character X came to be used for the letter the (sounded kh), while the : was used for the ke sound. In English we pronounce X as ke in extra, as gz in exact. and as z at the beginning of such a word as xylophone

THE twenty-fifth letter of the alphabet is one of the four letters (U, V, W, Y) which have developed out of the Greek upsilon Y. And these are all related to the letter F, being derived from the Egyptian hieroglyphic picture of the horned asp the body of the asp appear even better in Y than in the letter F (read the story of F) In the Middle English period Y was a favourite with penmen on account of its tinal flourish, and they frequently used it in place of a final I. That is why to-day we write "city," "fairy," and "kindly," but where Y is not terminal use I, as in "cities," "fairies," "kindliest." In old English books Y often represents the th sound, as in we for the because of its resemblance to Anglo-Saxon P (called thorn), which had the sound th. Printers, not having this letter, replaced it sometimes by th and sometimes by y.

Yusuf ibn Avyub (v@/soof ibn 1,00b) (highed name of Schadin (q.r.)

OUR Z comes from the Greek letter Zeta, written thus: Z. Originally in Egyptian picture, writing it represented a duck Written in a running hand (the "hieratic" form, it became the symbol and then in the Phoenician and early Greek alphabets came to look more like the letter I crushed down T.T.. As the letter became more crushed the vertical became diagonal and finally slipped at top and bottom so as to joint the horizontals as in the Z to-day.

Among the Phoenicians it was the 7th letter and so remained in the Greek and early Latin alphabets, but it was dropped from the Latin, the 3rd century B.C. Later. when the study of Greek became a mark of culture andong the Romans, it was restored, but it had lost its place in the alphabet and had to fall in at the tail of the procession. where it still remains. It was called ired in Old French and ezed in Early English; hence the queer old name of izzard for the letter Z. In the U.S. V. it is called zec.

"BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE" BIOGRAPHIES

A Classified List for those who like to read about Famous Men and Women

THIS list contains the names of all those whose lives and achievem-new may been recorded in Volumes 1 to 7, and or their own separate headings. In each instance the name as printed below in capital letters is the one to turn to in order to find the article: for example, Julius Carsan will be found under Caesar, not under Julius. Each name is given only once in this list, although many of them might well be under two or more thus Napoleon I is placed among the ROYAL PERSONAGES, and his name is therefore not repeated among the Warsious—and there are several other examples. Some have defied classification, and me therefore placed under that convenient heading, MIRCHILANEOUS

To read through the list is like passing swiftly through the world's Hall of Fame. These are the men and women who, through successive ages, have helped more than any others to mould our civilization directly or indirectly into its present shape. A few, indeed, may have left an evil mark behind them. But without a doubt indirectly into its present shape. A few, indeed, may have left an evil mark bothind them. But without a doubt the majority have wrought great and lasting good, and nothing could be more stimulating than a study of their lives and their varied contributions to history, to knowledge, and to the enrichment of human existence. Remember that history is never finished. The future will certainly breed as many great and famous men and works as the spast has done. Some days perhaps, in some edition of The Book of Knowledge, yet to be printed, such a list as this may include the names of some who now, as boys and girls, are reading these lines. Will your name be among them? Who can tell? Meanwhile you may find satisfaction in taking as a motto the often-quoted lines of Joseph Addison: "Tis not in mortals to command success, But we'll do more Sempronius; we'll deserve it."
